Does God answer our prayers?

During the devastating bushfires Australia suffered this past summer, lives were lost and many homes and flora and fauna were destroyed.

Amid this destruction, many people turned to prayer, petitioning God for relief and rescue. In this respect, today's readings offer comfort in the form of a reassurance that God's love is enduring. Paul goes so far as to reassure his Roman congregants that "nothing can separate us" from the love of God made visible in Christ - "neither death, nor life," no matter how bad things may appear in the present or future. The Psalmist similarly reassures the Israelites that "the Lord is near to all who call upon him".

But others may not be comforted by these words of encouragement and hope. Such people are tempted to reject the notion that prayer can be efficacious. For many caught between these two reactions, there is a real crisis of faith that prompts deep questioning about the nature of our relationship with God.

Does God care that we are suffering? Why did God not prevent these terrible fires? Does God answer our prayers for help?

There is no easy response to these questions. The stark reality of the recent devastation suggests that God does not answer our prayers for immediate and direct intervention. The key to unlocking this conundrum is found in today's gospel.

At the end of long day of preaching and teaching, the disciples ask Jesus to send the hungry crowds home so that they can eat and rest. Jesus responds by telling his disciples to minister to their needs out of their own resources.

Perhaps the most remarkable aspect of the devastating fires was the overwhelming charity and support offered to those affected by their fellow citizens and by people from across the globe. Volunteers rushed to help; community organisations partnered with governments to offer sustenance and practical care. People across the world united to agitate for change in our relationship with nature.

The impetus for this response comes from the values and morals of a society that has shaped over millennia by the Judeo-Christian tradition, which stresses the central importance of building societies based on a respect for human dignity, justice, and charity.

God may not always answer our prayers by acting directly or even miraculously to avert an immediate threat to our lives. But God has acted and continues to act pre-emptively through inspiration and revelation to shape and build a capacity for charity and love into the hearts of humans and human societies.

God respects both the integrity of human beings and the integrity of natural processes. God works in and through those two processes, the human and the natural, to bring about tangible change in our relationships with one another and with nature.

COVID-19 Updates from Bishop Greg issued this week

28 July 2020 - FEAST OF THE ASSUMPTION (SATURDAY, 15 AUGUST 2020)

This year, the Feast of the Assumption falls on a Saturday and cannot be moved to the Sunday.

I now, dispense the faithful of the Diocese from all Holy Days of Obligation until the cessation of the pandemic.

29 July 2020 – CHOIRS

Yesterday, I received a memorandum from the Secretary of the Australian Catholic Bishops' Conference – warning against any singing, including small choirs and rehearsals in our Churches. The most recent medical advice is that COVID-19 can be transmitted amongst singers, even if there is social distancing.

Therefore, there should be no singing at all in any of our Churches. However, musicians are still allowed to perform and recorded music may be played.
